À PROPOS

Today's volatile, uncertain, complex and ambiguous environment (known as "VUCA") calls for leaders to develop new skills in order to manage their teams successfully, while taking all stakeholders into account. Managing a team cannot be done without knowing oneself and taking into account the multiple facets of a group. This certificate will give you the tools you need to lead your teams to performance and success, in a context of caring and listening.

OBJECTIFS

Understand and define the impact of human and social skills in leading a team or department.

Strengthen self-awareness and better understand human behavior within organizations.

Identify concrete and applicable management practices that reinforce the leader's impact on his or her team.

PUBLIC CIBLE

Anyone in charge of a department or team wishing to develop their human and interpersonal skills.

Managers or future managers wishing to develop and review their leadership behaviors and practices.

Managers and future managers wishing to help their teams achieve sustainable performance through a more human approach.
